"This entry hall is part of an 18-month gut renovation of an 8,000-square-foot 'rambling ranch' with 23 rooms and nine baths," says Denise Wenacur. "The client was very open-minded, and allowed us to create many one-of-a-kind items, such as the mahogany-inlaid front door made to our specifications by a wood artisan in Colorado and the painted silver and gold-gilded entry dome that holds a 150-pound chandelier made by a local faux painter from Interior Creations." The architect on the project was Tom O'Brien and the general contractor was Colin Christiansen. The homeowners were so happy with the results, they threw an open-house party to celebrate.
